Some Math

Claim: there exists an infinite amount of prime numbers

Proof by Contradiction.

Assume that the number of primes is finite, and that all such numbers are on a list:

$p_1, p_2, \dots, p_n$

Consider the number

$$N = p_1 \cdot p_2 \cdot \dots \cdot p_n + 1$$

For any $i \in \{1, \dots, n\}$, if we divide N by p_i , we obtain remainder 1. Hence no prime p_i on our list divides N . Therefore, either N itself is prime, or it has a prime factor not in our original list.

Thus, our assumption must be false, and there must exist infinitely many prime numbers. $\square$

\accent Usage

\accent behaves exactly like \alert. However, one of the theme's colours can be specified as an option to allow for easy highlighting.

Visual	Command
highlighted	\accent{highlighted}
highlighted	\accent[yellowUU]{highlighted} highlighted	\accent[creamUU]{highlighted} highlighted	\accent[orangeUU]{highlighted} highlighted	\accent[burgundyUU]{highlighted} highlighted	\accent[greenUU]{highlighted} highlighted	\accent[blueUU]{highlighted} highlighted	\accent[darkblueUU]{highlighted}
highlighted	\accent[purpleUU]{highlighted}

Listings Template

Various styles have been provided with this theme for external tools. See the `styles` folder for external library and application styles. LaTeX-related styles have been added to `beamerthemeuu.sty`. As an example, take the following code listing to which the Listings style uu has been applied.

1  """A small code example in Python"""
2  def sayHi(who: str) -> None:
3      print(f'Hi {who}!')
4
5
6  sayHi('Utrecht')

Standout

This template reverses the colour usage. It could, for example, be used to review or recap information or draw special attention to a particular aspect.
